PRESS RELEASE

[Your contact name, telephone number and e-mail address]

[DATE]

TITLE: [Insert lecturers name or theme of lecture] coming to give a free lecture, open to all.

[Intro]

It is rare that people in ordinary life have access to lecturers and scholars of national repute outside universities or pulpits to engage with often gritty and challenging topics explaining and defending the Christian Religion against objections.

The Montgomery Trust lectureship enables any interested ordinary lay people to host a lecture and invite Theologians and scholars who have based their research and studies on the defense of Christianity on historical evidence, philosophical arguments, scientific evidence and arguments from other disciplines.

Montgomery Trust Lectureships

Background information

Sir Alexander Montgomery of Albury, Surrey, left provision in his Will for a lectureship series in 1937. He was interested in making known, through public lectures, the results of modern scholarship on the Bible, with an emphasis upon Christian apologetics.

In his Will it is stipulated that the Montgomery lectureship is:

“For the purpose of promoting lectures in explanation and defence of the Christian Religion and with a view to removing difficulties widely felt in the way of faith in God and to demonstrate the reasonableness of theistic faith.”

Paragraph 7 from the Will of Sir Alexander Cecil Montgomery -1937

Sir Alexander expressed a preference for the lecturers ‘being proficient in some branch of science or scholarship and preferably lay, with a gift for popular exposition’. There are over 30 Montgomery Trust Lecturers available who each have 3 lecture titles and themes to deliver.

The Trust has three ex officio Advisers to oversee the programme – The Dean of St Paul’s Cathedral, The Dean of Westminster and The Dean of King’s College, London. The Advisers are responsible for the appointment of lecturers.
